Product Owner Bullseye!

Purpose:
- To visualise the point in time truth for the product owners you're working with
- To gently remind the product owners of some basic good practise

Instructions:
- Give your product owners stickers (different colour for each)
- Simply ask them "what is true for you?"
- Product owners put a sticker on the line for each question with the yellow centre being 'this is totally true for me', and the grey outer circle being 'this is not currently true for me'.

You participate in sprint planning (and bring an up to date backlog)

You're recognised as the single PO for the team i.e.all backlog and prioritisation decisions go through you)

You have regular, direct contact with customers

You facilitate the sprint review meeting

You have regular, direct contact with stakeholders

You understand and contribute to estimation

Your backlog is visible, transparent and clear to all

You have daily contact with your team

You participate in sprint retrospectives

The team discuss with you the technical work in order for you to prioritise this along with the functional work

You order items in the backlog to best achieve product goals and mission

During sprint planning you discuss product priorities, know which backlog items support this and help craft the sprint goal